Just below the center of the photo, a northwest caver is dwarfed by speleothems in Petroglyph Cave.

Half hidden by a protruding ledge, Barb Macleod studies pots in a Belizean cave.

At extremely low water, much of the Caves Branch sinks into its bed before the entire stream goes underground. This aerial photo shows mostly sand in the river bed. Note the haystack hills typical of tropical karst.

Scale is lost in viewing the enormous entrance of Petroglyph Cave.
